EU Immigrant Influx in The UK

British Prime Minister David Cameron has been accused of prejudice for imposing strong measure on EU migrants to ensure that they are unable to claim out-of-work benefit for the first three months of arrival in the United Kingdom. There is a growing concern of Romanians and Bulgarians influx which will affect Schools, health, jobs, housing and public welfare. This brings a huge pressure on the UK government as the Romania and Bulgaria restrictions imposed on them when they joined the EU in 2007. Their rights to work and claim benefits were limited for the first seven years of EU membership. Today the Romanians and the Bulgarians have equal rights to work freely across the EU particularly in Britain there are fears of a large influx of them.

The fear of influx has been xenophobic, targeting EU migrants coming in the United Kingdom to take Jobs, free healthcare, benefit claims, schools and housing. The UK government were quick to impose strong measure on these EU migrants which is a way to cover up a failed policies. Speaking to members of the public, there were also fear among Londoners about the Romanians and the Bulgarians coming in to take up their jobs. For the EU migrants, it is a special new year gaining equal rights wether they accept it or not its their right to live and work in the UK.
