Thinking it was a Ukrainian transport plane, Strelkov added that "a plane has just been downed somewhere around Torez, it lays there behind the 'Progress' mine, "? referring to the mining town of some 80,000 people. "And here is the video proving another 'bird' falling down, "? he continued. "The bird went down behind a slagheap, not in a residential district. So no peaceful people were injured, "? Strelkov wrote, adding that there is also information about a Ukrainian military plane shot down. However, Strelkov deleted the post when he found out it was actually a commercial jetliner carrying 295 innocent people "" not a military aircraft.

When Mashable called Alexander Borodai, self-declared prime minister of Donetsk People's Republic, to ask if the group was responsible for shooting down the plane, to which he responded: "Listen, we don't have these weapons [to down the 777]." Then he hung up. The pro-Russian rebels in Donetsk have been colliding with Ukrainian forces for months and have brought down several military aircrafts. However, the rebels denied their involvement with two crashes this week, saying they didn't have the kind of equipment to carry out such an event.
